The 1,750-word letter, which seems to have gone unnoticed even to scholars, goes on dis-play today at the Pierpont Morgan Library as part of an exhibition of the library's Dickens treasures, to commemorate the centenary of his death. Dickens died June 9, 1870. Dickens's harsh indictment of

Mr. Rothblatt argued that It Duffy was acting in good faith when he ordered the unamed Victuamese prisoner to be shot because the army's stress on body counts had persuaded him that the killing was his duty as an officer.

In denying this defense, the milltary judge was in effect clearing the Army of responsibility for the murder of the civilian, some ob servers asserted.

Greece Sets Up Country-Wide National Guard ATRIENS, March 30 (Renters) .-

Greece's army-backed government today created a National Guard to preserve peace and order and face any internal Communist threat or foreign aggression. A royal decree published in the Official Gazette said the new force would consist of a number of battalions, known as Special Military Units, to be stationed throughout the country. Those liable for service will be regular or reserve officers and citizens who have completed their military service, aged from 19 to 50, and in special cases up to 60. They will be selected by the regime on a regional basis. National Guard members will be subjected to military rules and dis-ciplinary punishment and will be unable to leave their region without

Paradise on Sale for $3.5 Million From a Once-Penniless Fisherman

JOHANNESBURG, March 30 (NYT),-The price of Paradise is $3.5 million. And its owner, Joachim Alves, once a penniless Portuguese fisherman and now a multimillionaire, believes some South African will buy it.

Pollution Test Paradise is the unofficial name of an island half a mile wide and a mile and a half long. The tropical haven of bleached sand fringed by palms is 30 miles from the mainland and 400 miles north of Lourenco Marques, Mozambique.

Mr. Alves wants to sell Paradise-officially Santa Carolinaas well as the neighboring islands of Bazaruto and Magaruque and the mainland fishing trading bose at Vilanculos. Thousands of South African fishermen and vacationers visit the island annually, mostly traveling by ferry from Vilanculos. The island has a hotel and an airstrip but no telephones. Wealthy South Africans fly in regularly for long weekends of some of the best big-game fishing in the world. Marlin, salifish, barracuda and many other species of fighting fish can be found

It was the opening of these waters to big-game fishermen that helped Mr. Alves build up his fortune. Now he is reported to be in poor health and wants to sell.

"Why in hell do you think you are qualified to be a congresswoman for the U. S.? You people are ruining yourselves by pushing... If we can eliminate you people, what a good country we would have. You ought to have had enough trouble when you lost your husband. Why ask for more?" The attractive black woman in a bright green pants euit shuddered slightly. "That's my first hate mail," she sald quietly. "Does that bring back memories."

The memories were of Missis-sippl and the night of June 17, Medgar, a leading civil rights worker in the state, was gunned down on the perch of their home in Jackson.

Now Mrs. Evers had decided to run for Congress from Cali-fornia's 24th District, and like her husband, she had not taken the easy road. Part of the district, located in the San Gabriel Valley east of Los Angeles, was once represented by John H. Rousselot, a member of the John Birch Society.

Since Rep. Glenard P. Lips-comb died last month, nine candidates have announced for his seat. Mrs. Evers is the only Democrat. The eight Republicans include Mr. Rousselot and Dr. William F. McColl, a former all-America football player at Stanford.

The Democratic candidate in 1968 won only 27 percent of the vote, and the odds are heavily against Mrs. Evers. But she has been fighting the odds for a long time. After her husband's death, she stayed in Jackson for a year with her three small children. "That house was a constant reminder," she re-"Every time I walked out of the front door it was like seeing his body lying there. We had the same refrigerator with the bullet hole in it. It was just a little too much." Friends in California helped her settle here in Claremont, a flower-filled, middle-class town that revolves around the five Claremont colleges. Having had only two years of college, Mrs. Evers wanted to get her degree. She enrolled in one of the five, Pomona College. "I was very much surprised at the ethnic make-up of the town," she recalled. "I didn't realize we were only the third hlack family until I had made a down-payment on this house. At that point I was not sure I was looking for a town like this -I was still filled with a lot of hitterness and hostility. But most people were extremely warm to us."

The Children The three children-Darrel is now 16 years old, Rena is 15, and Van is 10-presented an even bigger problem. The most difficult thing of all was being solely responsible for those three children," she said, her voice laden with the memory. "Not having someone there to help make decisions or talk about them is a pretty heevy burden for a woman to assume. Even the strongest of us need someone to turn to." "I just turned 37 and the kids were saying, 'Gee, mom, you're getting old,' " she said as a smile returned. "I guess we all are. My daughter is in the final for cheerleading at school and my oldest son plays soccer and football and track. These are the things their father and I used to talk about when they were babies, and now it's happening.

In the midst of her grief and loneliness. Mrs. Evers plunged into her work. In addition to school, she took on speaking assignments for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and wrote a book, "For Us, the Liv-ing." She is an animated, articulate woman, but her movements are a little stiff, as if she had worked hard to conquer a natural shyness.
"I had a lot of guilt feelings about leaving Mississippi. Mre. Evers said. Even though I knew it was best for my wellbeing and the well-being of the children, I couldn't get away from that gnawing guilt, as if I were deserting the cause. By going out and speaking so much, I feit as if I were keeping in contact with the etruggle. I could say to myself I was still in there, still carrying the banner. "It was a hectic life," she eaid, "but our home life had never been very normal. In Mississippi, before Medgar was shot, we were always being threatened and harassed."

After Mrs. Evers finished her degree in sociology in 1988, she slowed down a bit. Her health wae failing and she took a fulltime joh at the Center for Educational Opportunity, an affiliate of the Claremont colleges, which helps disavantaged youngsters get an education. "Before this campaign came up, I had promised myself a long vacation," she said, some-what wistfully. "I hadn't prom-ised the kids because I learned not to promise them anything I can't keep." Politics have always been in the back of Mrs. Evers's mind. She even thought about going back to Mississippi—she is a native of Vicksburg—but her brother-in-law, Charles, had already started the campaign that would make him mayor of Fayette.

When a group of local resi-colleges, asked her to run for Congress last month, she put it up to her children. "They worried about how much time it would take me away from nome," she said, "but when we talked about it, they said, Mon, if you really want to do it, we'll back you's Why did she decide to run;

"I was so disturbed about what seemed to be the effects of polarization," she sain, her voice rising with excitement. "We seem to be going backwards as a nation as far as human rights are concerned. As a nation we are dividing up into esparate groups and pulling ourselves apart."

Mrs. Evers admits that she sounds "idealistic and naive"...

and a little bitter. Many whites who supported the civil rights cause in the early days, she feels, lost their comitment as heach demands grew angrier and more insistent. But she atili believes in integration.

Those who say integration is not a realistic idea might be right," she said, "but I will hope and pray and work to show they are incorrect."

Underrated, Underpriced Wines than comparable A.C. wines

By Jon Winroth

PARIS, March 30.—Several official categories of wines exist in France. The best known, which include the most famous and without a doubt the best wines, are the vins d'appellation contrôlée. And yet another category of wines that is often underrated and underpriced has even stricter regulations than those governing the appellations contrôlées. Called vins delimités de qualité supérieure (superior quality wines), it includes a number of wines that are easily the equal of many appellations con-What, for instance, makes a

V.D.Q.S. Chiguin from Savole inferior to a Loire valley Sancerrs A.C.? It would be hard to say, except for price. Sancerrc may have the edge in fruitiness, but Chignin has even more of the pierre à fusil, or smoky gunflint, taste of the soil that is so prized in a good

In actual fact, the two categories are complementary rather than competitive. The A.C. laws were first elaborated in the 1930s while the V.D.Q.S. category dates from the postwar years. Looseness in the original A.C. laws was tightened up for V.D.Q.S., and this in turn led to stricter A.C. lews. Today, if a wine is to become an A.C., it must satisfy the same precise criteris as a VD.Q.S. wine. Regulations common to both categories cover the area of production, the grape type, the yield per acre, the vinification and the minimum alcoholic content, but only VD.Q.S. rules uniformly insist upon chemical analysis and tasting by a panel of local experts.

Furthermore, the V.D.Q.S. label, a little postage stamplike affair appearing on either the label or the neck of the bottle, is awarded for only three months at a time. Renewal requires a new analysis and a new tasting, something which no A.C. has ever put up with and which some of them could well use. One frequent criticism of

If any is left by the end of the century, there is every reason to believe it will still be a magnificent V.D.Q.S.

One sure advantage of V.D.Q.S. wines is price. Because they are less well known, they are almost always better bargains

Donizetti: A Triumph for Two

By Alan Blyth ONDON. March 30.—The present Donizetti

I ONDON March 30.—The present Donizetti boom brought us a revival of "Robert Devereux," Donizettle 57th opera, in a London Opera Society concert performance at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, last night. It is a crafts-manlike piece, as you would expect from such a prolific composer, but only once or twice does Donizetti rise above his own conventions and give us a bit of inspiration. Ludicrously chirpy, even banal passages—for Elizabeth I in Act One when she hopes Essex will renew his love, for Essex himself in Act Three when in the condemned cell-stand cheek by jowl with affecting sections where Donizetti seems to have thought himself into his characters' predicament.

Most of these occur in the dnets between the four main characters but there are also the fine ensemble in the second act, and Elizabeth's final aria and cabaletts where she has a terrible vision of the beheaded Essex and then, quite unhistorically, resigns the throne to James L Orchestrally, the most subtle writing is at the beginning of the dungeon scene, which bears a striking resemblance to the opening of the second scene of Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera."

The Washington Post. Montserrat Caballe . . .a touch of asperity.

Essentially it is a singers' piece and stands or falls by their competence. This performance was distinguished by striking interpretations of the two principal female roles. Montsenst Caballe, the Spanish diva, repeated her New York Opera Society performance as Elizabeth Her voice is not only up to the formidable technical problems set by Donizetti, it also has a warmth and fullness, with just a touch of asperity added, to suggest Elizabeth's varying emotions—her tury at Essex's unfaithfulness, her remorse when she sends him to his doom, her regal command in her public appearances. Thera were many beautiful things from her in the evening, none more so then her tender warning ex to beware of offending Henry VIII's

The American-born, European-based messo Tatiana Trojanos made an imposing Sarah, Duchess of Nottingham, who all undernown to Elizabeth has stolen Essex from her Miss Troyanos poured out her rich, wheat tone unstintingly and convincingly all evening as if her life depended on every phrase. She scored a triumph in her duet with Vicente Sardinero, a young Spanish baritone, who sang with more vigor than subtlety as Nottingham. Bernads Marti, Caballe's husband in real life, was Essex. His vocal production is tight, his style ungainly, but he tries hard to please and made something of Essex's remorse in his cell Charles Mackerras knows just how to make the most of Donizetti's big tunes and um-ti-tum rhythms, and he found the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra in cracking form.

More glorious music on Saturday in the Elizabeth Hall, where Janet Bucket sans ariss from 17th-century Venetian operas and Domenico Scarlatti's rarely heard "Salve Rayma". Like Troyanos, Baker knows how to communicate the meaning of every syllable even in a foreign tongue, and her projection of Cassandra's lament from Cavalli's "In Didone" was great vocal art, as unforgettable in emotional compliment as in vocal accomplishment. She was shy supported by a section of the English Chamber Orchestra under Raymond Leppard. The Starings turned out to be a well varied, often moving and beau-tiful work, especially when same with all this artist's many skills. artist's many skills.

The War Widens

The Vietnamese war has not been a faceless war-just the reverse. No human struggle in history has presented so many faces to so wide an audience: faces of every color, showing every shade of emotion. But even this Goyaesque portraiture has contributed to the shapelessness of the conflict—heroes. villains and above all victims, mingled as the fighting fronts are mingled. The battles writhe over the countryside and through cities and villages like some hind, primitive life form, some bacterial mass, spawning itself here and wasting away there.

Now this shapeless war had intruded deep into Cambodia. How deep, how grave, is hard to tell, and what the impact of its blight impossible to discern. But it would seem that the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese have reacted predictably to the ousting of Prince Sihanouk and the closing of the port that bears his name. Laos feels the side-effects, apparently, in lessening pressures on the Plaine des Jarres; South Vietnam and its allies in sharper clashes along the border.

With all the density of the fog of war that lies over embattled Indochina, some myths have been dispelled, and the simplicist theories of many Americans have been rudely jarred. Hanoi's nationalism—so highly praised by its American sympathizers as well as some more objective critics of the American position—has little regard for the nationalisms of the Laotians or the Khmers.

Whether it considers the territories of these neighbors as simply a corridor through which to attack the Saigon government, or as lebensraum, is as presently irrelevant as was the same question when the Germans came through the Low Countries in 1914 and 1940. It is North Vietnam that has widened the

But the implications, in morals and in international law, are also less important, at this moment, than the practical question of what is to be done about the wider war. And the only same answer is to end it-at every point where it is killing men, women and children and disrupting the sufficiently hard lives of those who till the soil and keep the assorted economies of Indochina going.

This is not a completely idealistic thesis. The United States has made it plain that it wants out. For the Soviet Union and China, their own rivalries make continued involvement in the area dangerous. Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam all want to be let alone. And North Vietnam? It has won victories, and probably can win more. But the new attitude of Cambodia places an additional strain on already straitened resources of men and materiel, and insures new enemies even if the old should be defeated. There is still the option of a negotiated settlement, one that would leave to time and political means the continuation of whatever struggles might outlast the blizzard socked in Chicago, and on Easter Sunday, great, white flakes came out of gray sky over New York. It all seemed symbolic of the strong grip of winter on the land: the winter of our American discontent.

Wars and rumors of war, strikes, racial friction, bombing, demonstrations on streets and in schools—these mingled with such snows that the New England of "Snowbound" issued emergency proclamations, and such cold that the South shivered through long days. Congress and the President were at odds, prices rose and production fell, the stock markets slid downhill and taxes seemed more burdensome than ever. Under leaden skies, pollution appeared as an acutely urgent problem, and the chill made breakdowns in heating a grave hardship for thousands. Even the telephone systemwhich everyone who had struggled with the vagaries of foreign installations thought of with wistful pride-became a thing of mysterious whistlings, clicks and silences.

No one has any right to expect that when the weather catches up with the calendar and the shy promise of a single crocus is fulfilled in the rich greenery and manycolored flowers of spring, the troubles of the winter will disappear with the last patches of dirty snow and ice. Indeed, there are a swarm of troubles that may respond

As March drew to its stormy close, a to a warming sun and lengthening days; the succession of a long, hot summer to a long, cold winter is not an alluring prospect.

> But as America has endured worse winters, and emerged—not unscarred, perhaps, but stronger in body and spirit than beforeso it can face the summer ahead, without facile optimism but at least with determination. When, in another March, replete with more grim imponderables and fewer working tools to meet them than this one, Franklin D. Roosevelt told the people who had just elected him that the only thing they had to fear was fear itself, he bequeathed a legacy to this generation that is worth

> True, while fear is an element of the mood that marks the waning winter, it is probably not the most dangerous one. Indeed a perilous aspect of today's discontents is the belief in instant solutions—instant cures for problems, as well as for the newer dilemmas that afflict the world. And this is resistant to compromise, to realistic, ameliorative experiments that take the old Adam into account. Nevertheless, the United States has the resources, physical and mental, to meet its people's needs. And perhaps, when the gray skies lift, it will find the will to use those resources, vigorously and wisely. The cycles of mood may be less clearly fixed than those of the seasons, but

Soviet Aid Failings

Troubles with Russian aid projects in India, Pakistan and Egypt, among other countries, are further highlighting the problems of developing nations dealing with Moscow. Faulty planning, inflexible specifications, disregard of local industry and expertise are some of the glaring shortcomings of the so-called benefactors.

Delivery delays and unsatisfactory performances of completed projects are also still drawing criticisms and leading many to feel that purely economic considerations rank very low in the Kremlin's selective aid

Conflict in Cambodia

Prince Sihanouk fell off his tightrope and if one thing is clear it is that he has no chance of getting back on it. If he ever is restored to his palace in Phnom Penh, it will be as the figurehead of the 'Red Khmers" he has vigorously fought for years and as the lackey of the Vietnamese Communists (North and South) whom it was his proclaimed (and effective) policy to keep at arm's length.

In any case, the Vietnam war is now being fought in Cambodia. The situation indeed resembles the Indochinese war which the French fought until 1954, with the difference that Thailand is now beavily involved as well. It is true that the Americans have infinitely more resources than France did 16 years ago, but President Nixon can hardly relish the prospect of taking on yet more responsibilities in Southeast Asia.

A Conservative View of the Court

the argument on his behalf that the Supreme Court needs a little mitment of the true conservative is to conserve institutions. Adapt to changing conditions, yes, but with respect for habits and forms ingrained in a society: Destroy institutions at your peril. In the United States, a country not strong in traditions, the Supreme Court has played a unique institutional role, building from the few words of the consti-tution a tradition and a faith in law. The court has often been wrong over the years, and often been attacked, but each time it survived because the people saw continuity and safety in its existence.

A notable episode of the courtpacking fight of 1937 illustrated the point. Mr. Justice Brandels, the great believer in reform, stood against the Roosevelt plan to add more liberal-minded justices to the court. Roosevelt was said to be puzzled and angry. But Brandels's position was not hard to understand. He believed in the institution of the Supreme Court, and he did not want to see it degraded for any short-run objective, however

The true conservative, then, should want to preserve the court whatever its momentary failings. Alistair Cooke put it recently: "To sap people's confidence in the Supreme Court would be as successful a radical mission as the carrying out of Lenin's prescription for revolution: The mutiny of the army."

Cooke, who has been describing mediocrity. In a phrase worthy of his hero, H. I. Mencken, Cooke said that not even in the 1920s, "The Golden Age of Mediocrity," had anyone, asserted the right of midgets to ascend" that bench. How is it that men described as conservatives can make such an argument? It was Sen, Roman L. Hrnsks of Nebrasks who said that mediocrities are entitled to a little representation on the Supreme Court-"we can't have all Brandeises and Frankfurters and Cardozos..."

Precedent and Principle

One comment in passing: If Hruska meant by the three names he used that we do not want all scholars on the Court, as one supposes he did, the short answer is moment.

But beyond that, the Hruska remark is revealing. It shows that at least some of the people who want Harrold Carswell on tha Supreme Court are not true conservatives. They are William Faulkner's Snopeses men with no respect for institutions, hard men who resent and want to destroy those with traditions and cultivation men whose vision extends only to their own immediate desires.

Of course there are conservatives in the Senate who understand this. Some of them are Southerners, as Sen. J. W. Fulbright's decision to America for British readers with vote for recommittal of the wry affection for a generation, was numination so dramatically shows.

T ONDON.—The essential com- Judge G. Harrold Carswell—and of made plain their embarrassment at Judge Carswell's undistinguished record, really not even rising to mediocrity, but have indicated their reluctance to oppose their President on a second Supreme Court There are ample precedents to comfort those Republicans concerned about party loyalty-even to satisfy Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate Republican leader, who of all people must know the gross inadequacy of this nomination. Twice, in our history, Presidents have been turned down by the Senate on two successive nominations to the Supreme Court-and once on three nominations in a

In 1894 the Senate rejected two nominees of President Cleveland. In 1874 Senate objections forced President Grant to withdraw two successive numinations. In 1844, three attempts by President Tyler to fill two vacancies on the court were turned down by the Senate. The reasons were varied-objections to the nominees' stature, political cross-currents. But in each case, interestingly, the President was dealing with a Senate controlled by his own party.

Aside from precedent there is winciple. What Edmund Burke. the model conservative, told his constituents in 1774 may apply just as well to relations between a senator and a President of his party:

The obvious danger in this growing turmoil is that President Nixon may feel compelled to escalate the American commitment to the region despite his repeated pledges to reduce the U.S. posture in the area.

And seizing Sihanouk's appeal, which they probably inspired, the Chinese and North Visinamese are increasingly referring to the "struggles" in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia as a single "struggle for Indochina."

The airport at Aswan is still closed to commercial traffic in order, it is believed here, to allow missile to be installed away from the eyes of travellers.

The establishment of the new missile sites is proceeding raptdly, but the introduction of the new systems has raised some questions that seriously worry Western observers here and the Russians

Along with the new SAM-3s, which have never been before de-ployed outside the Warsaw Pact countries, the Soviet Union has increased its force of advisers and technicians in Egypt.

Whether a confrontation over the SAM-3s will come is expected to depend mainly on where the Russtans decide to deploy the new missiles.

Currently, they are being put up around the so-called "Russian interest' bases—that is, the port of Alexandria, where a new missile site sits in the center of the eastern harbor in full view of the Seaside Boulevard: the Catro West air base and Aswan, the dam financed and built by the Russians. Among military men bere, it is believed that the Israelis will not attempt to take out the SAMs guarding these bases.

However, it is thought that, if the install the new missiles in the eastern desert behind the Sues SAM-2 sites.

veteran military observer. Actually, there is some questionamong air defense specialists as to just how effective the SAM-3s would be against Israeli plints flying high-performance Phantoms, Skyhawks and Mirages.

The SAM-3-designed specifically to hit low-flying, fast-moving aircraft-has never been fired in action. And it may be, some sources bers say, that the Russians would like to test the SAMs under genuine combat conditions.

But military experte say that the SAM-3 is not effective at altitudes below 500 feet-perhaps even 1,000 feet.

At the same time, the Israeli Air Force is highly trained in lowlevel attack techniques many of their raids on Egyptian bases have been at an altitude of around 300

Nasser Request

Reliable diplomatic sources my that both the Russians and the senior Egyptian advisers to President Gamal Abdel Nesser recommended against increasing the number of Soviet advisers in Egypt. But Mr. Nasser, it is reliably said, demanded during his secret trip to the Soviet Union in January that the Russians make a dramatic new show of support to counter the deep Israeli raids inside Egypt, including the suburbs of Cairo. The arrival of the SAM-3s appears to be the Soviet response.

The SAM-3s are highly sophisticated, with elaborate radar and computers, and, it is believed here. no Egyptians are yet able to oper-The Russians, therefore, must

So whether the Rossians become men-though this number could more involved, it is argued here, site the new missiles, and what they intend to do next if hit.

Despite some speculation to the contrary, military sources here do not believe that the Russians will send the new MIG-23 jets to Egypt, since they are not even operable at the squadron level in the Soviet Union. Rather, it is thought that Moscow might decide to provide Russian pilots to fly MiG-21s against the Israeli jets over the canal. Mr. Nasser is determined diplo-

Laos and Cambodia are sincere in their search for neutrality.

And it is to the long-term advantage of the great powers concerned in the future of Indochina, the United States, China and Soviet Russia, that this neutrality should be respected and upheld.

They should therefore meet now with the other members of the 1954 conference to reestablish the neutrality of the two countries before these are finally eroded by the fighting in Vietnam. This last should, of course, also form part of the conference agenda and a supreme effort be made to secure a comprehensive and guaranteed solution of the Indochina war. Admittedly the difficulties are formidable, but the alternative of a widening conflict is a warning signal which every influential capital should heed before it is too

U.S. Executives Predict Profits. Prices and Production Will Rise

WASHINGTON. March 30 (UPI) -- Many top U.S. corporate executives expect bigger profits, higher prices and increasing general business activity this year despite government forecasts of a cooling economy, a U.S. Chamber of Commerce survey released yesterday showed

Its poll of 855 board chairmen, presidents, executive vice-presidents and company economists indicated that Treasury Secretary David M. Kennedy may have been overly optimistic when he said last week that "inflationary psychology" has

Of the executives who responded to the poll, 510 predicted the volume of their own businesses would increase in the next few months, only 136 predicted declines and 197 expected no change.

Profits have been sagging for months. But 340 of the executives predicted improved profit margins this year, 271 sald they expect their profits to stay about the same, and only 179 forecast declines.

Asked what would happen to their prices in the last half of this year. 484 of the executives predicted increases, '206 said no change, and 104 said some up and some down. Only 98 of the executives said they were satisfied with the Nixon administration's effort to check inflation. A total

The Fund that has Everything Makes you this Fantastic Offer

If you have lost money on your present free trading stock or mutual fund, AFCA (Allied Fund for Capital Appreciation) will allow you what you paid for your investment towards the purchase of AFCA shares at normal costs.

Here's how it works: You must agree not to redeem your AFCA shares over these specified periods of time.

If your present holding has lostup to 10%, AFCA shares must be held a minimum . 1 year, from 10 to 20% 2 years, Losses of over 60% are subject to negotiation.

During these restricted periods your AFCA shares may be used as collateral. The above tables have been worked out actuarially. The loss AFCA accepts is offset by discount purchases of many of its assets, resulting in no loss to present shareholders. As an additional safety measure, the management reserves the right to terminate this offer should it adversely effect the performance of AFCA.

AFCA was launched Oct. 1st, 1969, at a net asset value of USS 10.00 per share. Net asset value per share as of March 26th USS 11.71. If you are interested in representing AFCA, please, contact

> SELECT GmbH. 8 Munich 15, Schwanthalerstrasse 5, Telephone 552621 Telex SELE D 5212049, Cable address SELDI, Munich

	Dear Sirs, I am interested in your offer.
I presently hold	shares of (name of holding)
ralued at	for which I paid (including commission)
Please, send m along w	e an AFCA prospectus and fully audited financial statement with instructions on how to complete this transaction.

BLONDIE

By Alan Truscott

"Opening Leads," by Robert Ewen, published this month by Prentice-Hall, is the first major work on the subject in the 45year history of the game of bridge. Ewen explores the opening lead in each important area: no-trump, suits and slams. He discusses lead-directing dou-bles and bids. He gives effective examples of brilliant leads. And in particular he urges the reader to draw essential deductions from the bidding, thus bridging the gap between the average player and the expert. The diagramed example from the book shows an opening lead problem that very few experts would solve. West opened one spade and was raised to two spades after a double from North. South showed his strong diamond suit and played in five diamonds doubled, bid by North

South took the club king, ruffed a heart, and entered dummy with a trump lead to ruff another heart. This established two heart winners in dummy, which eventually took care of South's losing clubs.

Ewen points out, rightly, that a rlayer who is paying careful attention to the bidding should defeat the contract by leading the club ace. It is highly unlikely on the bidding that South has the club king, and it is equally unlikely that he has a

If West's two aces and king are going to score three tricks the choice of opening lead hardly matters. The only real danger is that South has a singleton heart and dummy an established heart suit. So West must lead his club ace and follow with the queen when he sees the dummy, establishing a third trick for the defense before South can start on the heart suit.

BOOKS-

WILL THE SOVIET UNION SURVIVE UNTIL 1984?

By Andrei Amalrik. Preface by Henry Kamm. Commentary by Sydney Monas. Harper & Row. 93 pp. $4.95.

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

THE title of this pithy, remarkable essay is not friv-The Russian author, whose Visigothic name may be a key to the strength of his character, believes in the coming collapse of the Soviet regime. He places it somewhere in the period between 1980 and 1985 after an exhausting and devastating conflict with China. His vision and prophecy sound apocalyptic, but they are shrewdly buttressed by a weighty and sober analysis of internal conditions in the Soviet Union and of those forces that will good her into external adventures. For Americans the value of the essay lies less in the certainty of the prognostication, no matter how desirable it might seem to some American thinkers, than in the phenomenon it offers of an independent Soviet mind and the general picture it projects of the world seen through alien eyes-alien to us as well as to the Russians. A document more removed from the Stalinoid. cliché-ridden, question-and-answer Soviet paper can scarcely be imagined. To borrow an image from the author, the interest of his essay is the interest a fish would have for an ichtyologist if it could talk.

A Doughty Author

Andrei Amalrik is one of that rare breed, a dissident by na-ture and by political conviction. He is a man, as Henry Kamm points out in his warm introduction, who "can do no other," and whom Sidney Monas in his concluding essay identifies with the unyielding religious believers of another age. Although he has endured a season in Siberia, Amalrik is, as of this writing, still a free man. He lives with his wife under considerable harassment, however, in reduced and confining circumstances, in conditions so crowded as to be intolerable to anyone who requires peace and quiet for composition. But obviously a man who is willing to stand up before the Soviet regime will not be subdued by the miserliness of his surroundings.

For Americans the figure and thinking of Amalrik will be cautionary. For the general practice of Americans who quall before the idea of out and out war with Russia is to identify every loosening of restrictions in Russia as an earnest of the liberalization of the regime. The notion seems to be that Russia after a time will become moreand more like us. This essay destroys that comforting we spy out is merely the muscular shifting of a moribund leadership increasingly incapable of directing the affairs of the country. In a very striking metaphor, sure to be used in the future, he compares the leadership and the people to a man who has thrust a tommy gun into the stomach of another man whose hands are raised stiffly over his head. But the tension, the author says, cannot continue. The gunman loosens his grip a trifle; the other lowers his hands a bit. What the outcome of such a confrontation will be is roughly the substance of his paper;

Amairik's Russia is divided into three classes, the elite, the middle class consisting of trained academics and technicians. and the great proletariat. It is hard to measure which group he condemns most. Since the Stalinist purges removed the most able and independent men in the upper hierarchy, those who survived were the most colories and ordinary. Now in command they do not possess the dynamism needed for real leadership, Their aim is not to use power to perfect their policies, but to remain in power. They would be perfectly happy if the ordinary citizenry left them alone. But since the world insists on moving on—inflation makes for eco-nomic crisis, China for political crisis the bankruptcy of the ruling group stands exposed. The challenge to their rule is sure to come.

The middle class knows the nature of the ills that afflict society, but it is so much part of the machinery that runs it, it cannot resist the state without destroying itself. Everything becomes a limited, internal mat-ter and their weak-kneed apologetics help prop up the regime. His flercest attack is aimed at the people, the sacred segment of the Soviet state. "The idea of self-government," he writes, "of equality before the law and of personal freedom are almost mpletely incomprehensible to the Russian people." To them the notion of freedom is synonyraous with disorder. The Russian has no feeling for the individual personality. He respects strength, authority, communal demands. He also respects instice, but as the peasant sees it, justice is that "nobody should live better than I do." Justice is not the balance wheel but the leveler of society.

The situation of these three classes, together with the na-tionalistic strain within the Soviet empire and an exhausting war with China, which in the author's persuasive reasoning is sure to come, will eventually bring on a breakdown of the state. The consequent, anarchy may make the earlier revolutionary period seem like a kin-dergaten romp. No precis can indicate the epigrammatic force of his reasontog or the logic of his understanding of current events. The to come up in every reader's mind is whether the man is authentic. Is he what he appears to be? Would the authorities let a man like that keep his freedom? The very fact that these doubts arise only adds additional dimension to this provoking and mind-challenging debate.

Mr. Lask is a book reviewer for The New York Times.

In Her Head-A Century of Piano Playing

By Harold C. Schooberg NEW YORK (NYT).—Rosina Lhevinne was 90 years old

Last week this outriarch of music, this tiny lady who was playing in public until six years ago, this teacher who produced such stars as Van Clihurn, John Browning and Misha Dichter. this product of the Moscow Conservatory who was married to the colossal planist Josef Lhcvinne, this veteran on the faculty of the Juilliard School-last week Mrs. Lhevinne was talking about this and that in her apartment in the Bronx.

Naturally, she was mostly talking about planists. She had attended one of Sviatoslav Richter's recitals and was still in a glow about it. "I love him, I olean," Mrs. Lhevinne hastly added, "I love his playing." Was that a giggle from the 90-year-old throat?

She was wearing a print dress and she looked like Princess Anastasia or somebody from the imperial court at St. Petersburg. Her eyes are good, her hearing is good, her diminutive body is still sturdy though oom she walks with a caner, and she still puts in a few hours a day of practice. "Certainly." she said. "to demonstrate to the pupils, you have to practice." She has 22 youngsters, most of whom she teaches at her home in a room dominated by a Steinway "B" oo which is piled music of every description, and on which rests a picture of Lhe-vinne. She invariably refers to her husband, who died in 1944,

At the last encore he looked at where Mr. Lhevinne and I were sitting, gave a wink, and played the 'Lorelei.' Mr. Lhevinne never got over it. He of course knew the plece, had it in his own repertory, and he said

She spoke of legendary figures: Scrlabin: "He was a poetic planist, very romsotic. But he did oot have a very big technique." Leopo'd Gollowsky: "His technique was incomparable. Nobody has had or will have such a technique. We all learned from num legato. He had a marvelous legato." Moriz Roseothal: "That was a real technique. It was big, with fremendous power, oot as refined as Godowsky's technique, but tremendous. Rosenthal had a big appetite. I will tell you a story about Rosenthal. Once he went into a restaurant, before his concert, and asked for three steaks. For a loog lime he was xalting for the steals. 'Where are my steads? he asked the that Hofmann played it exactly as written."

waiter. I am waiting for your guests, the waiter ago. But the steaks are for me.' Rosenthal. Nobody these days eats before a concert. They are too nervous. But not Rosenthsl."

The conversation veered to conductors, and she mentioned Arthur Nikish. "I had the great privilege of playing with him. It was magnificent. My plece was the Hummel B Minor Concerto. I will tell you a story about Nikisch. Mr. Lhevinne played with him in Leipzig with Tchaikovsky's B Flat Minor. We arrived in Leipzig the day tefore the concert to speak with him about tempos. He was not there. The next morning he did not show up for rehearsal. We did not see him uotil just before the concert. He came in and greeted my husband. 'Grüss Gott, Nah, Lhevinne, what would you like to tell me? Nothing? Good. The only reason we would need a rehearsal is if you want to play the Tchaikovsky in B Minor instead of B Flat Minor.' It was a wonderful performance."

Mrs. Lhevinne came to the Juilliard graduate school when it was opened in 1924. She is the only original faculty member left. Until she was 75 years old, she took all her pupils single-handed. Now she has two assistaots, Martio Canin and Howard Aibel, both former students. They give the students some Lhevinne basics. She is particular about arm and hand posis tion, and wants relaxed muscles from shoulders clear to the tips of the fingers. "You must caress the piano, oot hit it. Mr. Lhevinne always said that when you love somebody, you don't roar 'helio!' you sweetly say 'he-e-e-1-lo-o-o-o.' Perhaps there is We have too many young planists who so to concerts not to listen to the music but to count the pianist's mistakes."

She is also very particular in her teaching about the pedal "T forget who said it Hans von Bulow or somebody, but it is really true. The pedal is the soul of the plane. Anybody can get about six levels of nuance with normal pedaling.

"But we try for much more.
I teach my pupils what I call the trembling pedal, constantly in motion. Certainly you can get much more variety that way."

This summer Mrs. Lhevinne will be going to Aspen, Colo., where she has taught for the last 15 years. She has oo idea of giving up that extra work. She loves it there. "Of course," she says, "I cao plao only from one day to tomorrow. But yet, I will be there. The altitude does not bother me. It seems to bother some of the young peo-ple, but it does oot bother me."

Looking over her 90 years, Mrs. Lhevinne is content. Her two children. Don and Marianna, are married and living in California. She has done the things in life she has most wanted to do. She likes young people. She likes her Claremont Avenue apartment, where she has been living for the past 24 years. She loves her maid Sarah Crump, who has been with her for 47 years.

"One thing I would like to say," Mrs. Lhevinne ended.

"Certainly I am B graduate of the Moscow Conservatory. I was there from 1889 to 1898, and I graduated with the Gold Medal. But I consider Juilliard my aima mater and America my homeland. Please write that. And don't let anybody tell you that the age of great piano playing is over."
